Was there a difference or distinction invited to be present and participate between these bonds? Did bonds issued on account of railroads differ materially from those issued to build the Capitol? Do we find a picture of locomotive on one corner and on Speaker, after an inspection of the bonds, that every bond whatever, issued by the State of Tennessee, is exactly in the same language except the clause which refers to the act under which it was issued. It reads "The State of retary of State, and if there is a difference between them, so far as our obli gations are concerned, I confess my mability to discover it. No one who will take the trouble to make an ex-amination of the matter, will seriously contend that the State debt proper is no more than two millions. It is today between seven and eight millions,
